standing topside leaving to go on the ship's first ever deployment overseas".

This Texas Navy Flag was given to the USS Texas (SSN 775) at her commissioning by the Texas Navy Association. Former TNA President, Captain C. W. "Swede" Anderson helped organize getting the commissioning of the USS Texas in Galveston, Texas. The USS TEXAS' Commander reported that the Nimitz Squadron Christening/Commissioning "GIFTS" were still proudly displayed in the ship's Wardroom!

USS Texas Arrives In Busan , Korea For Port Visit

By Lt. Lara Bollinger,
Commander, Submarine Group
7 Public Affairs, July 14, 2011

BUSAN, Republic of Korea (NNS) -- Virginia-class fast attack submarine USS Texas (SSN 775) arrived in Busan July 9 for a port visit as part of its deployment to the western Pacific.

With a crew of approximately 140, Texas is only the second Virginia-class submarine to operate in the western Pacific. The only submarine of its class in the region, Texas works to maintain regional security and international relations, and delivers unique capabilities worldwide. "Our ship's incredible stealth, endurance and war fighting capabilities make Texas the most technologically advanced nuclear powered attack submarine in the world," said Cmdr. Robert A. Roncska, Texas ' commanding officer. "I am extremely proud of my crew's performance and we are looking forward to experiencing beautiful South Korea with our close ROK Navy friends."

While discussing the opportunities and sights in Busan, the chief of the boat machinists mate senior chief Matt Harris told his crew, "This port visit will be a great opportunity for you to get some much needed rest and relaxation."

For many of the crew members, this is their first time visiting Korea .

"I've been on board for more than three years and this will be my first foreign port," said sonar technician (submarine) 3rd class Russel Myrick. "I'm really looking forward to experiencing the culture and getting some time to relax."

Measuring more than 377 feet long and weighing more than 7800 tons when submerged, Texas showcases advanced technology unique to the Virginia class, making it the quietest attack submarine in the fleet. This submarine is capable of supporting a multitude of missions, including anti-submarine warfare, anti-surface ship warfare, strike intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance, irregular warfare and mine warfare, and shallow water operations.

Built in Norfolk , Va. , Texas shifted its home port from Groton , Conn. , to Pearl Harbor , Hi. in the Fall 2009. This marks the first western pacific deployment for the submarine. For more news from Commander Submarine Group 7, visit www.navy.mil/local/csg7/.

With great pride Ben McTee, from Henderson, TX, stationed on the USS Texas (SSN 775) snapped this image of the Texas Navy flag while leaving for the western Pacific for 6 months. It was hoisted on the mast at the stern of the ship, while flying the Texas state flag from the bridge (the sail of the submarine). The submarine was commissioned in Galveston in September 2006, where Ben became a plankowner. He said he did a little research once they pulled into Busan South Korea to find out the history of the flag, and thought he'd pass this photo along to the TNA. Ben said, " From what I understand, it hasn't been flown from a Navy warship in quite some time, so I was really proud to see it while

Introducing Our Newly Elected TNA Board of Directors

Change of Command Ceremony Port of Beaumont

Presenting LTC Clady (R) a Texas Navy Admiral Commission are Texas Navy Admirals (L) Admiral Don Dildy and (C) Admiral John Nicholson

Out going LTC Tom Clady receives a Texas Navy Admiral's Commission presented by Texas Navy Association Admiral John Nicholson and Admiral Don Dildy. "It was clear, that this honor came as a surprise to LTC Clady. The highlight was when during his formal remarks, Col. Jeffrey B. Helmick, Commander, 597th Transportation Battalion (LTC Clady's boss), addressed LTC Clady as, Admiral Clady", said Texas Navy Association Commander Mark Underhill (Safety Manager U.S. Army 842nd Transportation Battalion).

Clady just completed two years as commanding officer of the 842nd Transportation Battalion stationed at the Port of Beaumont. During his command, Clady oversaw the movement of 146 vessels bearing 11,000 pieces of military equipment either en route to southwest Asia or returning from that theater of operations.

For Clady, Beaumont was the "perfect assignment" because he is a Leesville, La., native and both cultures of Louisiana and Texas blended "right there." Lt. Col. Tom Clady is going to miss his native Louisiana cuisine and his adopted Texas barbecue as he heads for his next Army assignment at the U.S. Transportation Command at Scott Air Force Base in St. Clair County, Ill., east of St. Louis. Ship's Log

Dear Admiral Fisher,

I recently met a dealer in Texas historical memorabilia, Ollie Crinklemeyer of Austin, and purchased two sets of prints of Texas Navy ships from him, one for myself and one to donate to the Houston Yacht Club in memory of Admiral Tynes Sparks.

Crinklemeyer olliec@austin.rr.com has a few additional sets of these prints and I believe other members of the Texas Navy Association might be interested. I have no relationship to Crinklemeyer except as a satisfied customer.

Sincerely,
Admiral William Schleuse

The following incident will likely be appreciated by our membership:

Admiral Mic Barnette was being introduced as a speaker at a genealogical seminar. As the lady doing the introduction of the speaker read through Admiral Barnette's biographical data, she mentioned that he was an Admiral in the Texas Navy. Without missing a stroke, she turned to her side faced him and said "Thank you for your service".

Admiral Mic Barnette

Admiral Fisher,

On my application I indicated that I work aboard USS Lexington here in Corpus Christi. If anyone in the organization is in Corpus Christi and wishes to tour the ship they can let me know and I can give them a guided tour at no extra expense to them (normally $25 per guide). If contacted directly I can work out times, dates, etc. Unfortunately I cannot give them a free pass for admission, but I can save them on tour guide fees.

Thanks again for your work.

TNA Admiral's Award Winning Poem

Without her knowledge Admiral Lori Carrigan's daughter submitted Admiral Carrigan's poem to poetry.com and much to her surprise, Lori's poem was chosen for the "Editor's Choice Award", and has been published in various military newsletters as well. Congratulations were many including from former President George W. Bush!

"FREEDOM REIGNS"

Imagine the irony of a terrorist's fate;
Held captive since birth by terror and hate.
Their bold plans to take our freedom away;
Only to discover freedom is here to stay!

I wish for the world the freedom we know;
As Americans, we defend a friend and fight a foe!
How fortunate for us we are aware of the significance of freedom or restraint and knowing the difference!

So, there is no doubt as freedom reigns,
and liberty and justice for all remain;
In our country democracy still stands,
while we wish the same for foreign lands!

TNA Admiral Shares Texas Navy History

Admiral Dyess doesn't just walk the walk; he "talks the talk". Fulfilling the Texas Navy Association mission statement Admiral Dyess is spreading the word throughout Tarrant and Smith Counties.

Admiral, and Nimitz Squadron Commander, Jack Dyess has spent his summer months spreading the history of the three Texas Navies. He was approached as a 'substitute' speaker for one of his Tarrant County genealogical groups, and the rest is history. Word of his interactive Power Point presentation spread among lineal groups, then to the Fort Worth Genealogical Society – and continues to find its way to senior centers, assisted living centers and teachers of Texas history in the public school system. His presentation was mentioned at a Montgomery, Alabama convention and interest continues to grow in the unique and special Texas Navies.

The Texas Navy Time Line (Continued 1836)

January 1

The eight-gun Baltimore schooner Invincible, newly purchased by Velasco businessman Samuel May Williams, arrives at Galveston Harbor.

January 3

Texas shipping entrepreneur Thomas F. McKinney offers to sell his armed privateer William Robbins to the revolutionary government for $3,500. The vessel would be purchased by Texas later that month, and would be rechristened the Liberty. McKinney, whose business partner Samuel May Williams had just purchased the warship Invincible, also offered to sell the Invincible to Texas for a 12 percent finder's commission.

January 5

The revolutionary government's General Council authorizes agents to inspect and purchase the William Robbins and the Invincible. Around this time, Texas commissioners to the United States Stephen F. Austin, William H. Wharton and Branch T. Archer arrive in New Orleans and inform Governor Smith that they purchased the William Robbins during its voyage to New Orleans and rechristened it the Liberty. That same day, the General Council provisionally adopted the naval regulations of the United States as the rules governing naval officers of Texas.

January 7

Texas General Council directs its Committee on Naval Affairs to consider revoking letters of marque and reprisal, issued to privateers, now that Texas is on its way to purchasing a navy. That same day, Texas governor Henry Smith vetoes the General Council's move to purchase the William Robbins on the grounds that it already had been purchased by Texas' commissioners to the United States. The Council overrode Smith's veto, but Smith never took action on the measure.

January 9

Reports reach Texas that the Mexican warship Moctezuma was prowling the Texas coast, waiting to seize shipments of volunteers and arms bound for Texas ports.

January 10

Governor Smith sent the General Council a scathing letter rejecting its attempted purchase of the William Robbins and Invincible and plans to send an expedition to Matamoros, a port on the Rio Grande. Smith's ire stemmed from the Council's purported intrusion on the power of the executive, and afterwards relations between the Governor and the General Council became so strained that the government ceased to operate until independence was declared in March 1836.

January 14

Austin, Archer and Wharton appoint Edward Hall as Texas' naval agent in New Orleans. Hall had already acquired the warship Brutus in December 1835. That same day, Lieutenant Governor James Robinson suggested that the General Council establish a marine corps to augment its naval power. Eventually over 350 men and 18 commissioned officers would serve in this branch of Texas' armed forces.

January 14-15

Mexican Navy Lieutenant Thomas M. "Mexico" Thompson is tried by the U.S. District Court in New Orleans for piracy, for his attack on the Texas-owned (but American flagged) brig Tremont, steamer Laura and armed schooner San Felipe. He and fellow defendant, Mexican Army Lieutenant Carlos Ocampo, were released after Ocampo's acquittal and Thompson's jury deadlocked. The case became so acrimonious that the prosecutor and defense lawyers began throwing inkwells and books at each other across the courtroom, and were sentenced to jail for contempt of court. The New Orleans Courier reported the next day: "The issue of the suit is indeed a very remarkable one such, it may be said, as never happened before the pirates set at liberty and the Attorneys committed to jail.”

January 16

The Invincible receives its commission as a Texas Navy warship.

January 18

The U.S. armed revenue cutter Ingham is purchased from the United States and renamed the Independence. The eight-gun warship would serve Texas as its flagship under the command of Commodore Charles E. Hawkins. During January, the Independence began its first cruise, escorting supply vessels from New Orleans to Galveston, the Brazos River mouth, and Matagorda.

January 21

Commissioners Austin, Archer and Wharton appoint A.J. Yates to travel to the United States to purchase an armed steamer for the fledgling Texas Navy. Nothing ever comes of this proposal, and Texas will not have a steam-powered warship until 1839.

January 24

Schooner Brutus, now armed with seven guns, arrives in Matagorda under Captain William A. Hurd, the former captain of the privateers San Felipe and William Robbins.

January 27

“Mexico” Thompson’s warship, the Correo Mexicano, is returned to the Mexican chargé d’affaires in New Orleans. The schooner was in such decrepit shape that she had to be sold for $450.

January 28

The Liberty arrives in Texas waters under the command of Captain Jeremiah Brown.

February 1

The revolutionary General Council’s Committee on Naval Affairs recommended that the warships Invincible and Brutus be sent to Matamoros to support an invasion of Mexican territory. The warships ultimately were never used in connection with any invasion of Mexico during the Texas Revolution.

February 12

Registry of the seven-gun warship Brutus was transferred to the Texas government, becoming the last of the four warships to comprise the first Texas Navy.

February 16

Texas commander James Fannin, providing an assessment of the condition of Santa Anna’s invading army, wrote to the revolutionary government:

“Provisions are very scarce in Matamoros and the adjoining country, and they must depend upon New Orleans. Where is your navy? Stop those ports, and they are ruined.”

February 25

The merchant vessel Pelicano cleared New Orleans loaded with black powder hidden in barrels of flour. The Pelicano would be captured by the Texas warship Liberty the following month, becoming the first significant prize captured by the Texas Navy.

March 2

Texas declares independence from Mexico.

March 3

The war schooner Liberty (formerly the privateer William Robbins) falls in with the merchant vessel Pelicano and captures it. The Pelicano’s cargo of fruit, flour and other food-stuffs concealed three hundred kegs of gunpowder, which were forwarded to Sam Houston’s retreating Texas Army.

March 6

Under the joint command of William B. Travis (for the regular army) and Jim Bowie (for the volunteers), over 2000 Mexican troops stormed the Alamo Mission in San Antonio. All of the Texan defenders were killed.

March 12

Commissions are issued for the first commanders of the Texas Navy: Commodore Charles E. Hawkins (of the Independence), Captain Jeremiah Brown (of the Invincible), Captain William A. Hurd (of the Brutus), Captain George Wheelwright (of the Liberty), and Marine Captain Arthur Robertson. That same day, Captain Luke Falvel of the privateer schooner Flash received his commission as a privateer captain. The Flash would play an important role in evacuating refugees from central Texas to Galveston Island as Santa Anna's invading army drove towards Harrisburg and San Jacinto.

March 16

Ad interim President David G. Burnet appoints Robert Potter of North Carolina as Texas' first Secretary of the Navy.

March 20

The American brig Pocket, carrying dispatches and supplies for the Mexican army, along with several Mexican Navy officers, clears New Orleans for Matamoros. The Pocket would be captured by the Invincible off the mouth of the Rio Grande, and this seizure would set off a huge legal and diplomatic uproar between the Texas Navy, the Texas government, and the United States. That same day, the Texas flagship Independence began her second cruise along the Mexican coast.

March 25

President Burnet issues a proclamation suspending all letters of marque and reprisal issued to Texas privateers, evidently in response to the effectiveness of the official Texas Navy and public backlash from New Orleans against the seizure of merchant ships bound for Mexico by privateers.

April 1

Samuel P. Carson, Texas' provisional Secretary of State, authorizes Texas patriot James Morgan to purchase the armed schooner Flash for the Texas government. The deal never goes through.

April 3

The schooner Invincible sails to Brazos Santiago, at the mouth of the Rio Grande, flying a U.S. flag and spots the Mexican warship General Bravo stranded, with her rudder damaged.

The Invincible sends a lieutenant in a U.S. Navy uniform aboard for reconnaissance, but the Mexican captain sees through the ruse and attempts to flee towards Matamoros, the armed garrison further upriver. The Invincible opens fire on the Bravo, and the two ships exchange cannon fire for an hour with no serious damage to either side. The Invincible draws off when a strange sail is spotted on the horizon, and captures the stranger, which turns out to be the U.S. brig Pocket, carrying goods, personnel and information to the Mexican Army. The incident persuades Matamoros military authorities to call of a resupply and reinforcement mission of an estimated 1,000 troops and supplies for Santa Anna's army. If these troops reached Texas near Galveston or Brazoria, they probably would have given Santa Anna's second-in-command, General Vicente Filisola, enough troops to prompt an attack after the Battle of San Jacinto, which could easily have spelled the end of the budding Texas Republic.

Thus, the Invincible probably saved Texas. The Invincible and her crew would, however, be arrested in New Orleans the following month for piracy for the seizure of the Pocket, and the controversial capture would cost Texas in money and public support in New Orleans. (The Texas Navy lieutenant sent to the Bravo, Lt. William H. Leving, was shot as a spy on April 14). (Cont'd in the next issue)

Nautical Quiz

Texas Navy Commander Mark Underhill, Safety Manager U.S. Army 842nd Transportation Battalion, Port of Beaumont, has offered a Coast Guard Gulf Strike Team Ball Cap and Patch (hard to find) as a prize for the member who correctly answers the nautical quiz. Because we have so many intelligent members, all correct answers will be put into a hat and a drawing will produce the “winner”. Dead-line is August 8, 2011. Many thanks to Commander Underhill for this donation and for the quiz questions.

You must have BOTH correct to be in the winner’s hat.

1. What is a nautical Hammerfer?
2. “To an Inuit of the far north, a kayak is only a kayak if piloted by a male. What is the name given to the vessel if a female is in the driver’s seat?”
